Harvest Update

June 15, 2016

ALFALFA

Following a brief pause for weather, second cutting Alfalfa harvest will be in full swing by the end of this week in the Kittitas Valley and Columbia Basin.

New Mexico's first cutting Alfalfa harvest is wrapping up. Weather conditions were mostly favorable and growers were able to bale some very nice export quality hay.

Recently, rain showers have moved through both Utah and Oregon. This rain has negatively impacted quality in areas of Utah and delayed harvest efforts in Klamath Falls and Christmas Valley. Both areas have managed to put up some export quality hay but continue to work around wet weather, potentially limiting the number of export quality tons available from those areas.

TIMOTHY

First cutting Timothy is in the middle of harvest activities. Mixed weather across the region has contributed to a wide range of grades as both the Kittitas Valley and Columbia Basin have experienced untimely rain showers in areas.

STRAW

Cool wet weather is delaying straw harvest a bit from earlier estimates. Expectations are for harvest to get going near the end of June.
